Dear Gabriela:

It gives me pleasure to be able to write a letter of reference, addressed to whom it may concern at any time.

You were one of the best students in a far-better-than-average group of students who attended a course instructed by myself, at the School of Journalism of the University of Southern California. You were prompt, generous, cheerful, and resourceful in your work, and you contributed greatly to the analytical critiques of the course student writing which were a feature of the course.

I wish you well in your enterprises, and it would not surprise me at all to find you published in media of quality.

Sincerely,

Norman Corwin
